ABOUT ME:

I am Dea Mutidze – a second-year student at Caucasus University, studying the English-language Psychology program at the School of Humanities and Social Sciences. I have always known that I wanted my career to be related to education, but I decided to take a longer path: first to study psychology, and then to use that knowledge to contribute to building a better education system. At this time, I am interested in several fields and am doing my best to learn more so that I can more easily discover my true path.

Caucasus University provides students with excellent opportunities to enjoy a diverse student life. Among these, I had the chance to join the Caucasus University Folklore Ensemble and the Caucasus University Theater. In my free time, I participate in projects organized by non-governmental organizations that focus on education and psychology. Currently, I volunteer at Caritas Georgia, where I teach English and also help students with other school subjects.
