I first heard about the Erasmus+ exchange program when I was still in school, and I immediately knew I wanted to participate. As soon as I became a university student, I started working toward this goal. Fortunately, Caucasus University gave me the incredible opportunity to study for one academic semester at Vilnius University in Lithuania.

My motivation for going abroad wasn't just academic—it was also about personal and professional growth. My deep love for music played a big role in this journey as well, as I wanted to grow as an artist and share my music with more people. While in Vilnius, I had the chance to perform in front of Lithuanian and international audiences.

Life in Vilnius was rich and diverse. The city's cozy atmosphere and beautiful streets brought me a sense of inner peace. Despite the harsh winter, every day spent there—whether with fellow students, friends, or loved ones—left a lasting mark on my heart and mind. During my time abroad, I also had the chance to visit other European countries, making my experience even more unforgettable.

This program allowed me to deepen my knowledge in my field, collaborate on projects with skilled professors and peers in the tech industry, and take meaningful steps toward my goals. Most importantly, it taught me how to live independently.

I am incredibly grateful to Caucasus University for making this experience possible and for all the cherished memories from Vilnius University, the city of Vilnius, and Lithuania as a whole.

I can confidently say that the Erasmus+ exchange program is more than just an opportunity to study abroad - it's a gift for personal, professional, and cultural growth.
