Assistant Professor of Caucasus School of Business, Lasha Arevadze, participated in the International Week of the Krakow University of Economics within the framework of the ERASMUS+ academic staff mobility program from May 25 to May 30.

During the week, representatives from around 30 countries took part in thematic workshops focused on the challenges of global business operations and the role of universities and educational systems in shaping business as a global operations hub. The event also included the sharing of best practices for implementing successful research projects, among other topics.

The week coincided with the 100th anniversary of the Krakow University of Economics. In connection with this milestone, participants engaged in various events that discussed the role of Krakow's educational ecosystem in the city's development as a hub for high-tech business operations. The discussions also addressed the need to prepare professionals with interdisciplinary skills in light of current and future challenges.

The academic staff mobility was important not only for knowledge sharing but also for establishing connections with faculty from other universities, which will contribute to the internationalization of research and the exchange of best practices in the future.
