Studying in France has become one of the most unique and memorable experiences for me, which has left a significant mark on my development. Living in an international environment means daily innovations, diverse experiences and continuous progress - this is the path where you discover your own abilities step by step and develop as a person and future professional.

Student life in Lille was special. Studying at the Catholic University of Lille, IESEG School of Management, gave me the opportunity to be in a dynamic and diverse environment. I especially liked the high quality of education and lecturers who shared not only theoretical knowledge, but also their own practical experience, which made studying much more interesting and valuable. And the city of Lille, with its unique atmosphere, made this experience even more memorable.

Student life in France for me was not just about studying. It was about getting to know a new culture, small daily adventures and interacting with people who came from different countries of the world. It was this environment that taught me adaptability, independence, and self-belief.

Of course, this path was not without challenges - adjusting to a new system, stepping out of my comfort zone, and being away from my family was sometimes quite difficult. However, it was these difficulties that taught me independence, strengthened me, and helped me become more confident.

Today, when I look back on this experience, I realize that it was one of the best decisions of my life. Therefore, I wholeheartedly advise everyone who has a similar opportunity - dare, because the biggest changes begin precisely when you take a step towards new opportunities!
