My semester in Lisbon was one of the best adventures of my life. Studying at ISCTE was exciting and productive, with amazing professors whose lectures were always engaging and full of new perspectives. The classes pushed me to think differently, connect theory to practice, and learn in a way that felt truly inspiring.

Also, because Lisbon is one of the biggest hubs for Web3 and digital innovations, I had the opportunity to meet a lot of interesting people and attend conferences and meetups. This was especially exciting for me, since I've been passionate about this space for years and already work in it. Being in such an environment gave me both knowledge and valuable new connections.

But for me, the exchange program was much more than academics - it was about people, experiences, and unforgettable moments. Portugal is one of the top places in the world for surfing, and I had the chance to try it for the first time. It was an incredible feeling I'll never forget. On top of that, Erasmus Lisbon made sure we had plenty of opportunities to explore the country, enjoy student life, and dive into new adventures.

What made this semester truly special were the people I met. There was a big Erasmus community full of students from all over the world, and it felt like every event or trip gave me a chance to connect with someone new. Out of all these amazing people, three became my closest friends. Each of them came from a different country and culture, and instead of creating distance, those differences only made our friendship richer. We spent the whole semester traveling together, discovering Portugal's beauty, and at the same time learning so much from each other's cultures. I know for sure this friendship won't end in Lisbon - it's something that will last for years to come.

Another highlight was the ocean. Living in Portugal meant having the chance to enjoy yacht trips along the coast, swimming in the Atlantic, and seeing countless breathtaking views. From the Benagil Cave to many hidden spots, every trip showed me something new and unforgettable. The ocean really gave this semester a special vibe that I'll always remember.

And of course, Portugal's nature itself is fascinating. It's a country full of green landscapes, forest-covered mountains, and endless coastal views. Every trip outside the city felt like stepping into a postcard — peaceful, refreshing, and inspiring.

Looking back, I can say the exchange program was not just about studying — it was a true life adventure. For anyone still thinking about applying, I can only say this: it's absolutely worth it!"
