„One of my main goals throughout my academic career was to participate in an exchange program, which I successfully did, and spent one semester in Slovenia through the Erasmus+ exchange program. I am glad that with the support of the Caucasus University, I was given the opportunity to study at the Faculty of Economics of the University of Ljubljana, which leads the world in the rankings of both business schools and universities in general.

The five months spent away from home proved to be jam-packed with adventures, novelties, memories, and, of course, some obstacles. All in all, the experience I acquired from adjusting to a new environment and living independently on a daily basis helped me in self-actualization. I made extraordinary friends who, despite being in a foreign country, made me feel at home. Also, participating in the Erasmus+ exchange program completely altered my perspective on the world, through getting to know various cultures and their people, as well as, traveling a lot. The academic aspect of the exchange was also incredibly enriching, as I had the chance to take courses that were not available at my home university and learn from professors with different teaching styles and perspectives.

I'm pleased that I was able to achieve my dream. I believe that taking part in the exchange program is a once-in-a-lifetime chance that nobody should pass up. It is an incredible opportunity to learn, grow, and expand your horizons in ways that you never thought possible.”
