In April 2024, within the Erasmus+ academic staff mobility program, I was at Inholland University of Applied Sciences, Netherlands.

During the visit, he conducted lectures on managerial control systems and the cost of capital for business studies students at the Alkmaar and Haarlem campuses.

During the lectures, the students get acquainted with brief information about Georgia and the Caucasus University. The lecture topics were related to performance indicators for managerial control and the value of various components of capital, their calculation methods and importance.

Furthermore, I met with local academic staff and administration representatives and discussed the importance of international relations and similar exchange, opportunities for joint research projects, and students' involvement in international projects.
