„Erasmus+ was not just a trip abroad, it was a journey for discovering myself. It was my first ever flight, my first time living in another country, and my first step outside the comfort zone I had always known. It felt like diving into the unknown, but I quickly realized how adaptable we are when faced with new challenges.

Living in the Netherlands and studying at Inholland University gave me more than knowledge, it gave me perspective. I met people from every corner of the world, each with their own culture and stories. We worked together on real-world projects, sharing ideas and learning from each other, which was way better practical experience than just theoretical knowledge. Each day was filled with emotions like excitement, anxiety, happiness, fear, homesickness, and love, these are the feelings which makes a human a real person. For the first time in my life, I felt truly alive. Every single moment, every conversation, every new experience felt meaningful.

What I didn't expect was how much this experience would make me appreciate my own country. I left Georgia afraid I wouldn't want to come back, but I returned feeling more connected to my roots and motivated to make a difference here. I will always be grateful to each and every person who helped me get this amazing experience.”
