Tuscia / Italy

As part of the Erasmus + academic staff mobility, I visited Tuscia University, where I gave a lecture on “Development Macroeconomics”. The University is located in the ancient and unusual Italian city of Viterbo. It was especially gratifying for the Georgian students to attend my lecture at Tuscia University. They also showed me the city.

I think Erasmus + programs play a huge role in the professional and personal development of young people, by sharing their European values and creating boundless opportunities for the future. I am glad that once again I was given the opportunity to visit beautiful Italy and visit unforgettable Rome. I would like to see the expansion of Erasmus + programs and the involvement of more students from Georgia.
